"julia!" damien strained against his chains, wrenching his body out toward her; the jangle of the iron links echoed in the open space like a grating cackle. "don't do anything to her! i'll fight! i'll--" the liquid scorched down julia's throat like a shot of extra high-proof alcohol, but unlike alcohol, the burn didn't fade. it intensified, it spread. icy flames of agony licked through her body. her skin broke out in sweat and gooseflesh at once as the angry fire branched through her chest and down, down-- down to her womb. "no," she breathed, pressing both hands to her stomach, the pain abruptly forgotten. time seemed to freeze, trapping her in that initial moment of incredulous horror. the steady soft beating that had become so much a part of her own self had suddenly stopped. she searched within herself for the sense of any presence, but her body was hollow, empty. "no!" she screamed, her fingers scrabbling across the skin as though she could find the life inside of her by hand. "what have you done?! what have you done?!" "julia!" damien cried hoarsely. "julia, what is it? what is--" "what have you done?!" .more
