A GEOGRAPHY OF TIME: THE TEMPORAL MISADVENTURES OF A SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGIST, OR HOW EVERY CULTURE KEEPS TIME JUST A LITTLE BIT DIFFERENTLY

in this engaging and spirited book, eminent social psychologist robert levine asks us to explore a dimension of our experience that we take for granted--our perception of time. when we travel to a different country, or even a different city in the united states, we assume that a certain amount of cultural adjustment will be required, whether it's getting used to new food o in this engaging and spirited book, eminent social psychologist robert levine asks us to explore a dimension of our experience that we take for granted--our perception of time. when we travel to a different country, or even a different city in the united states, we assume that a certain amount of cultural adjustment will be required, whether it's getting used to new food or negotiating a foreign language, adapting to a different standard of living or another currency. in fact, what contributes most to our sense of disorientation is having to adapt to another culture's sense of time.levine, who has devoted his career to studying time and the pace of life, takes us on an enchanting tour of time through the ages and around the world. as he recounts his unique experiences with humor and deep insight, we travel with him to brazil, where to be three hours late is perfectly acceptable, and to japan, where he finds a sense of the long-term that is unheard of in the west. we visit communities in the united states and find that population size affects the pace of life--and even the pace of walking. we travel back in time to ancient greece to examine early clocks and sundials, then move forward through the centuries to the beginnings of "clock time" during the industrial revolution. we learn that there are places in the world today where people still live according to "nature time," the rhythm of the sun and the seasons, and "event time," the structuring of time around happenings(when you want to make a late appointment in burundi, you say, "i'll see you when the cows come in").levine raises some fascinating questions. how do we use our time? are we being ruled by the clock? what is this doing to our cities? to our relationships? to our own bodies and psyches? are there decisions we have made without conscious choice? alternative tempos we might prefer? perhaps, levine argues, our goal should be to try to live in a "multitemporal" society, one in which we learn to move back and forth among nature time, event time, and clock time. in other words, each of us must chart our own geography of time. if we can do that, we will have achieved temporal prosperity. ...more

(whatever that means.) but will she get her groove back in a tiny rented apartment, with a mountain of boxes, visible panty lines, and a slight wine-and-cheetos problem? "i was a thirty-something woman living alone with four cats. i was probably going to be divorced. i was on the short bus to crazy. i pictured my grandmother making hoop-skirted yarn cozies for the toilet paper. i pictured myself making doilies for furniture that i did not own. i saw my cats wearing knitted hats with lace appliqué. from my vantage point, knitting seemed like 100 percent of some road i did not want to walk down." yet, surprisingly, it's knitting that saves her and emboldens her to become fully engaged in life again--to discover new friends; to take risks, however scary; and to navigate the ins and outs of the modern dating scene. "dating has changed in a decade. now there is a higher chance of meeting someone who has an internet porn addiction than someone who has a job. in los angeles, your dinner companion might have served time in pelican bay or run a meth lab. or, worst of all, he might spend all night talking about his agent, his craft, and what it means to grow as an actor. then he'll ask you to read his screenplay." and such is life in this quirky, irreverent memoir, a spin-off of the blog phenomenon, www.crazyauntpurl.com, one of the most successful online diaries in history, exploding to an international fan base of enthusiastic readers. but don't worry, you don't have to knit to love aunt purl. you just have to know what it feels like to have loved, to have lost, or to have taken a leap of faith. we've all been there: pass the wine. ...more	Readable/Downloadable

prior to the 2004 athens olympics, few canadians - outside fencing circles - knew very much about sherraine mackay, but as the countdown to those games began, her name became more and more familiar, and while the world of fencing had been, up to that time, an esoteric sport at best, it too was suddenly thrust into the limelight. it helped, of course, that in the last world prior to the 2004 athens olympics, few canadians - outside fencing circles - knew very much about sherraine mackay, but as the countdown to those games began, her name became more and more familiar, and while the world of fencing had been, up to that time, an esoteric sport at best, it too was suddenly thrust into the limelight. it helped, of course, that in the last world cup of the season prior to the games, mackay had won gold (her second) that she had been ranked as high as number two, and consistently ranked among the top 10 female fencers in the world over the past five years. it helped that her photo suddenly began appearing in our national magazines and in major daily newspapers across canada. it helped that she was ebullient, outspoken, quick-witted and funny enough to land a spot reading her letters from paris on cbc radio's the inside track with host robin brown. in a surprise upset, a greek fencer bested sherraine in athens, though the canadian women's team, which she anchored, finished fourth - the best finish ever by canadian women in olympic fencing. "running with swords," is sherraine mckay's journal, her own story of her incredible journey from tiny brooks, alberta where she was born, to paris, france where she moved to train for athens while teaching english as a second language to elite athletes. at once inspiring, thoughtful and brimming with mackay's sense of humour, it is also the story of young athletes from canada and around the world, of the sacrifices made in the pursuit of dreams, the friendships forged, and the joy of the game whether on the track, in the field, in the water, on the ice, or on the piste. ...more

THE ELUSIVE QUEST FOR GROWTH: ECONOMISTS' ADVENTURES AND MISADVENTURES IN THE TROPICS

since the end of world war ii, economists have tried to figure out how poor countries in the tropics could attain standards of living approaching those of countries in europe and north america. attempted remedies have included providing foreign aid, investing in machines, fostering education, controlling population growth, and making aid loans as well as forgiving those loans since the end of world war ii, economists have tried to figure out how poor countries in the tropics could attain standards of living approaching those of countries in europe and north america. attempted remedies have included providing foreign aid, investing in machines, fostering education, controlling population growth, and making aid loans as well as forgiving those loans on condition of reforms. none of these solutions has delivered as promised. the problem is not the failure of economics, william easterly argues, but the failure to apply economic principles to practical policy work. in this book easterly shows how these solutions all violate the basic principle of economics, that people--private individuals and businesses, government officials, even aid donors--respond to incentives. easterly first discusses the importance of growth. he then analyzes the development solutions that have failed. finally, he suggests alternative approaches to the problem. written in an accessible, at times irreverent, style, easterly's book combines modern growth theory with anecdotes from his fieldwork for the world bank. ...more
